The Stories Of Raymond Carver

Raymond Carver is one of the best known short story writers ever. I think "Cathedral" is one of the most frequently anthologized stories, if my books are any indication. His writing is often classed as minimalism and dirty realism. Many of his stories have a spare style, and deal with the lives of ordinary people.

I don't know how many ways there is to tell a story but Raymond Carver's must be among the better ones. He uses a simple and clear language that gives substance to just about anything he uncovers, man and animal, a street, a house, an ashtray. There's also another thing, his stories can pick up speed and move real fast, before you even realize it you are somewhere else. He writes about ordinary people and their ordinary lives, sometimes slightly on the odd side. You'd think you wouldn't care, bu

The tracing of changes in Raymond Carver's short story style is one of the most persistent topics of Carver criticism. Unfortunately, by focusing on change, critics have overlooked one of the most consistent aspects of Carver's short stories, their sense of menace. In Fires, Carver explains: "I like it when there is some sense of menace in short stories. . . . There has to be tension, a sense that something is imminent. . ." (17). William Stull notes that one of Carver's early stories ...

Poet and short-story writer Raymond Carver was born in the logging town of Clatskanie, Oregon, and grew up in Yakima, Washington. He was married and the father of two before he was 20, and he held a number of low-paying jobs: he "picked tulips, pumped gas, swept hospital corridors, swabbed toilets, [and] managed an apartment complex," according to Bruce Weber in a New York Times Magazine profile of the author.
